First-aid kits come in different sizes, for different purposes and the contents of a first-aid kit can be adjusted for activity according to the Red Cross. Consider packing a first aid kit to keep in your car, at home or in your workspace. Choose a container to hold your first aid kit before you start collecting the items you need in a first aid kit, consider where you plan to put it between use. For example, if you're going to the glove compartment of your car, you'll need a much smaller case or bag to hold your emergency supplies than you would need if they were going into the trunk or a shelf in your closet. Plastic containers, backpacks and zippered bags are all suitable items for use as first aid kits. Painkillers are some common elements for a first aid kit. Aspirin packages are a common recommendation and other painkillers that your family typically uses, such as ibuprofen, anti-diarrhoeal drugs and allergy medications, may also be included. Pain gels for dental injuries can also be useful in an emergency kit. A space blanket is recommended also for emergency kits, because the design ensures that it does not take up much space in the kit, according to the Red Cross. Supplies for wound cover: Supplies for cover are among the most basic contents of the first aid kit. Include adhesive bandages of different sizes, sterile pads of different sizes, medical grade adhesive tape and an elastic bandage, according to Kids Health. Roller bandages and compressed dressing are also useful and butterfly bandages do not take up much space and are useful for the cut skin. Useful supplies for emergency kits In addition to the bases that make up the requirements of the first aid kit, such as bandages, painkillers and antibiotic creams, there are some other useful elements that should be in an emergency kit if space allows, according to the Red Cross. Things Things Scissors to cut bandages and tweezers to collect things from wounds are useful. A torch and a non-mercury thermometer are useful added to a kit. Also consider adding latex gloves and a respiratory barrier. Medications and phone numbers Along with a summary of instructions for the first aid kit that tell people how to use emergency supplies, include any medicine that you or a family member takes under a doctor's prescription, according to the Red Cross. It also includes a written list of emergency phone numbers. In this way, the person who runs the emergency room under intense stress, all the information requested and the help can be called as soon as possible. BEFORE QUESTIONS ANSWERED.
